

Pros vs Cons of an Argument: All Boys or Girls Schools

Pros of All Boys or Girls Schools.

Those who advocate for All Boys or Girls education in public schools argue that:

- Some parents don't want their children to be in mixed-gender classrooms because, especially at certain ages, students of the opposite sex can be a distraction.
- Leonard Sax and others agree that merely placing boys in separate classrooms from girls accomplishes little. But All Boys or Girls education enhances student success when teachers use techniques geared toward the gender of their students.
- Some research indicates that girls learn better when classroom temperature is warm, while boys perform better in cooler classrooms. If that's true, then the temperature in a All Boys or Girls classroom could be set to optimize the learning of either male or female students.
- Some research and reports from educators suggest that All Boys or Girls education can broaden the educational prospects for both girls and boys. Advocates claim co-ed schools tend to reinforce gender stereotypes, while All Boys or Girls schools can break down gender stereotypes. For example, girls are free of the pressure to compete with boys in male-dominated subjects such as math and science. Boys, on the other hand, can more easily pursue traditionally "feminine" interests such as music and poetry. One mother, whose daughter has attended a girls-only school for three years, shares her experience on the GreatSchools parent community: "I feel that the single gender environment has given her a level of confidence and informed interest in math and science that she may not have had otherwise."
- Federal law supports the option of All Boys or Girls education. In 2006, Education Secretary Margaret Spellings eased federal regulations, allowing schools to offer All Boys or Girls classrooms and schools, as long as such options are completely voluntary. This move gives parents and school districts greater flexibility.

The Cons of All Boys or Girls Education

Those who claim All Boys or Girls education is ineffective and/or undesirable make the following claims:

- Few educators are formally trained to use gender-specific teaching techniques. However, it's no secret that experienced teachers usually understand gender differences and are adept at accommodating a variety of learning styles within their mixed-gender classrooms.
- Gender differences in learning aren't the same across the board; they vary along a continuum of what is considered normal. For a sensitive boy or an assertive girl, the teaching style promoted by advocates of All Boys or Girls education could be ineffective (at best) or detrimental (at worst). For example, a sensitive boy might be intimidated by a teacher who "gets in his face" and speaks loudly believing "that's what boys want and need to learn."

- Students in All Boys or Girls classrooms will one day live and work side-by-side with members of the opposite sex. Educating students in All Boys or Girls schools limits their opportunity to work cooperatively and co-exist successfully with members of the opposite sex.
- At least one study found that the higher the percentage of girls in a co-ed classroom, the better the academic performance for all students (both male and female). Professor Analia Schlosser, an economist from the Eitan Berglas School of Economics at Tel Aviv, found that elementary school, co-ed classrooms with a majority of female students showed increased academic performance for both boys and girls. In high school, the classrooms with the best academic achievement were consistently those that had a higher percentage of girls. Dr. Schlosser theorizes that a higher percentage of girls lowers the amount of classroom disruption and fosters a better relationship between all students and the teacher.
- The American Council on Education reports that there is less academic disparity between male and female students overall and a far greater achievement gap between students in different racial, ethnic and socioeconomic groups, with poor and minority students children faring poorly. Bridging that academic chasm, they argue, deserves more attention than does the gender divide.
- All Boys or Girls education is illegal and discriminatory, or so states the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) . In May 2008, the ACLU filed suit in federal court, arguing that Breckinridge County Middle School's (Kentucky) practice of offering All Boys or Girls classrooms in their public school is illegal and discriminatory. The school doesn't require any child to attend a All Boys or Girls class, yet the suit argues that the practice violates several state and federal laws, including Title IX and the equal Educational Opportunities Act.
